From 1933 to 1941 The Merrill-Palmer School provided everything needed by the organization. Since the resignation of Miss Sprague, the executive director, in 1941, the School has provided CWVS with office space and advice and dues of one dollar per year provide for overhead.

Detroit was one of the first cities in the country to have a council of social agencies. CWVS was one of the groups that comprised the Central Volunteer Council of the Council of Social Agencies. This became the Wayne County Council of Defense when war started and CWVS helped organize the Civilian Defense Volunteer Office, plan and establish the Blood Bank and Canteen courses and cooperated with the Red Cross by furnishing First Aid teachers. CWVS has been for over 20 years a source of trained workers ready to serve all agencies and community projects, providing toys, hospital technicians, research workers, secretaries, museum helpers, tutors, Braille transcribers and psychiatric social workers.

There is now a Central Volunteer Bureau in Detroit. Three CWVS Board Members are on the Volunteer Committee of the Bureau, and there is no question but that the two offices will supplement each other. One of the most satisfactory services of CWVS has been to provide the opportunity for strangers to make congenial friends, to get acquainted with their community and to be of service to it.
